Overview

The JV Accounting & Partner Reporting for Non-Operators Training Course by Institute For Oil & Gas Training develops the practical capabilities required to manage financial interests in a non-operated venture with greater control, transparency and commercial discipline. JV Accounting & Partner Reporting is essential for non-operators responsible for reviewing operator statements, validating charges, monitoring expenditure and protecting partner interests across oil and gas joint arrangements.

Non-operated interests create a distinctive accounting and governance environment. A non-operator does not normally control day-to-day field operations, procurement activity or accounting processes performed by the operator, yet remains responsible for understanding its share of costs, revenues, assets, liabilities and financial commitments. Effective partner oversight therefore depends on the ability to challenge financial information, identify exceptions and reconcile partner records with operator reporting.

This course addresses the skills gap between receiving operator financial information and exercising effective financial oversight over that information. Participants develop a structured approach to operator statement review, charge validation, expenditure monitoring and partner reconciliation. The programme also addresses information rights, supporting documentation, financial controls and dispute resolution processes that strengthen the non-operator position.

The course provides a practical understanding of how joint venture accounting operates across exploration, development, production and decommissioning activities. It examines the relationship between underlying transactions, operator accounting records, partner statements, cash calls, expenditure categories, cost allocations and the financial reporting requirements of the participating interests.

A central focus is the review of operator statements. Participants learn how to assess reported expenditure against approved work programmes, budgets, authorisation requirements and contractual provisions. They examine the financial logic behind charges and identify areas requiring additional evidence, clarification or challenge.

Charge validation is addressed as a core non-operator control. Participants learn how to distinguish legitimate joint venture expenditure from costs requiring investigation, including incorrect allocations, unsupported charges, inappropriate classifications, duplicate transactions and expenditure that falls outside agreed joint venture arrangements.

The programme also strengthens expenditure monitoring capabilities. Effective monitoring requires more than comparing actual expenditure with budget. Non-operators need to understand cost drivers, expenditure trends, commitments, forecasts, variations and the relationship between operational activity and financial performance. This course provides a structured approach to connecting these areas.

The programme examines equity accounting for joint arrangements and the accounting implications of participating interests. Participants gain a clearer understanding of how joint arrangement structures affect financial reporting and how accounting treatment interacts with underlying contractual rights and obligations.

Partner reconciliation is another major area of focus. Differences between operator statements, internal accounting records, cash movements and supporting documentation can create financial uncertainty and operational disputes. Participants develop practical reconciliation techniques for identifying differences, investigating root causes and documenting resolution.

Dispute resolution is addressed from a financial and commercial perspective. Participants learn how to establish evidence, trace transactions, interpret relevant provisions and communicate financial challenges clearly. The emphasis is on resolving discrepancies through structured analysis rather than relying on broad or unsupported objections.

Information rights also form an important part of non-operator oversight. Access to appropriate financial, operational and supporting information enables partners to exercise their contractual rights and maintain effective financial governance. Participants learn how information requirements connect with reporting obligations, review processes and audit activity.

The course is designed for corporate professionals working with upstream oil and gas joint ventures, production sharing arrangements, concessions and other shared-interest structures. It provides practical knowledge that supports finance teams, joint venture functions, commercial teams, asset management groups and professionals responsible for financial oversight of non-operated interests.

Institute For Oil & Gas Training positions the programme around practical application rather than theoretical accounting discussion. Participants work through realistic oil and gas scenarios involving operator reporting, expenditure review, partner balances, cost allocations and financial discrepancies. The result is a stronger capability to assess the quality and validity of information received from operators.

The programme also supports stronger collaboration between finance and operational stakeholders. Effective non-operator oversight requires financial professionals to understand the operational context behind expenditure. Participants therefore develop the ability to connect financial information with work programmes, production activity, procurement decisions, maintenance activity, development projects and other operational drivers.

By the end of the course, participants have a more structured framework for managing non-operated financial interests, challenging operator reporting, improving reconciliation processes and supporting commercially sound decisions.

Objectives

- Understand the principles and practical application of JV Accounting & Partner Reporting for non-operated oil and gas interests
- Develop a structured approach to operator statement review

- Validate joint venture charges against contractual and accounting requirements
- Identify unsupported, inappropriate, duplicated or incorrectly allocated expenditure
- Strengthen expenditure monitoring across non-operated assets and projects
- Understand the accounting treatment of joint arrangements and participating interests
- Apply practical techniques for partner reconciliation
- Investigate financial discrepancies between operator and partner records
- Improve the review of cash calls, expenditure statements and supporting information
- Understand the relationship between operational activity and reported joint venture expenditure
- Strengthen internal controls over non-operated venture accounting
- Use information rights effectively when reviewing operator financial information
- Develop evidence-based approaches to financial challenge and dispute resolution
- Improve communication with operators, joint venture partners and internal stakeholders
- Support more accurate financial reporting and management information
- Improve financial oversight of budgets, forecasts, commitments and expenditure
- Develop stronger documentation practices for financial reviews and challenges
- Apply relevant accounting standards to joint arrangement reporting
- Strengthen the ability to identify financial risks within non-operated interests
- Support commercially informed decisions through better financial analysis

Training methodology

Institute For Oil & Gas Training delivers this course through an applied corporate methodology designed around the financial realities of oil and gas joint ventures. The delivery combines expert-led discussion with case studies, operator statement simulations, group exercises, transaction reviews and practical reconciliation scenarios.

Operator Statement Review Exercises

Participants work through simulated operator statements containing realistic categories of joint venture expenditure. They assess charges, classifications, supporting information and cost allocations while identifying areas requiring further investigation.

Charge Validation Simulations

Practical exercises require participants to assess whether individual transactions satisfy agreed joint venture accounting requirements. The exercises develop a disciplined approach to checking transaction descriptions, supporting documentation, cost categories, allocation principles and approval requirements.

Expenditure Monitoring Scenarios

Participants analyse expenditure against budgets, work programmes and forecasts. Scenarios demonstrate how financial professionals identify significant variances, investigate cost drivers and distinguish between operational changes and accounting issues.

Partner Reconciliation Exercises

The course uses reconciliation scenarios involving differences between operator records and partner accounting systems. Participants trace discrepancies, identify root causes and establish appropriate resolution actions.

Case Studies

Oil and gas case studies demonstrate how non-operated ventures handle reporting challenges, cost disputes, information requests and partner financial reviews. Participants consider both the accounting implications and the commercial consequences of different responses.

Group Exercises

Participants work in groups to review financial information, formulate questions for operators and establish evidence-based responses to disputed charges. These exercises strengthen communication between finance, commercial and operational stakeholders.

Real-World Scenarios

The programme reflects situations encountered by non-operators, including budget variances, questionable charges, missing documentation, allocation differences, cash call discrepancies, reporting inconsistencies and unresolved partner balances.

Facilitated Discussion

Experienced facilitation allows participants to examine how different organisations structure their internal controls, reporting reviews and escalation processes. Discussion focuses on practical solutions that strengthen financial governance without creating unnecessary administrative complexity.

Organisational impact

The course strengthens the sponsoring organisation's ability to exercise effective financial oversight over non-operated oil and gas interests. Improved operator statement review gives finance and asset teams a clearer process for identifying unusual transactions, unsupported charges and expenditure that requires further clarification.

Stronger charge validation improves financial control. Organisations gain a more consistent approach to testing operator charges against approved activities, contractual provisions, allocation principles and available supporting information. This creates a stronger basis for challenging inappropriate expenditure.

Improved expenditure monitoring supports better budget control. Participants develop the ability to connect reported costs with operational plans, forecasts and expenditure drivers. This supports earlier identification of material variances and improves the quality of financial discussions with asset and operational teams.

Better partner reconciliation reduces unresolved differences between operator statements and internal records. A structured reconciliation process helps organisations identify the source of discrepancies, assign responsibility for investigation and establish documented resolution.

The course also supports stronger governance of non-operated ventures. Clear review procedures, evidence requirements and escalation processes create greater consistency in the way financial information is assessed across different assets and joint venture relationships.

Improved information management strengthens the organisation's ability to exercise information rights. Finance and commercial teams become better positioned to request appropriate supporting information and use that information to evaluate operator reporting.

Effective dispute resolution supports stronger partner relationships. Rather than approaching disagreements through unsupported challenges, trained professionals can present transaction-level evidence, identify the applicable accounting or contractual issue and establish a clear basis for resolution.

The programme also improves the connection between finance and operations. Organisations benefit when financial teams understand the operational circumstances behind expenditure and when operational stakeholders understand the financial implications of reported activity.

Personal impact

Participants develop practical expertise in JV Accounting & Partner Reporting that supports their responsibilities across non-operated oil and gas interests. They gain greater confidence in reviewing operator statements and questioning financial information in a structured and professional manner.

The course improves analytical capability by requiring participants to trace financial information from reported totals to individual transactions and supporting evidence. This strengthens their ability to identify inconsistencies, unusual charges and reconciliation differences.

Participants also improve their understanding of joint arrangement accounting and the relationship between accounting standards and participating interests. This supports stronger interpretation of financial information received from operators and better communication with corporate reporting teams.

The programme develops commercial awareness. Participants learn to consider expenditure not only as accounting data but also as the financial representation of operational decisions, procurement activity, development plans and asset management priorities.

Improved dispute resolution skills help professionals manage challenging discussions with operators and joint venture partners. Participants learn how to frame questions clearly, establish evidence and maintain a professional focus on resolution.

The course also strengthens cross-functional communication. Participants gain experience communicating financial findings to finance managers, asset teams, commercial specialists, operational professionals and senior management.

For professionals progressing towards senior finance, joint venture, asset or commercial roles, the programme develops a practical capability that supports stronger oversight of shared-interest assets and more effective engagement with operators and partners.

Who should attend

Joint Venture Accountants

Designed for professionals responsible for recording, reviewing and reconciling financial information relating to joint venture interests.

Non-Operator Finance Professionals

Supports finance teams responsible for monitoring operator reporting and protecting the financial interests of participating companies.

Joint Venture Managers

Provides a stronger financial framework for reviewing operator performance, partner issues and expenditure information.

Asset Managers

Helps asset professionals understand the financial implications of operational decisions and operator-reported expenditure.

Financial Controllers

Strengthens control over reporting, reconciliation, expenditure review and financial governance across non-operated interests.

Management Accountants

Develops practical skills for analysing budgets, actual expenditure, forecasts, variances and operator statements.

Commercial Managers

Supports professionals involved in financial aspects of joint venture agreements, partner relationships and dispute resolution.

Oil and Gas Finance Managers

Provides enhanced capability for managing financial oversight, internal controls and partner reporting requirements.

Internal Audit Professionals

Helps audit teams understand the transaction flows, control points and documentation required when reviewing non-operated ventures.

Senior Finance and Accounting Leaders

Supports senior professionals responsible for financial governance, reporting quality and strategic oversight of participating interests.

Course outline

Foundations of Non-Operator JV Accounting

This module establishes the financial and commercial foundations required for effective oversight of a non-operated venture. It examines the relationship between joint venture agreements, operator responsibilities, partner interests, accounting records and financial reporting.

Operator Statement Review and Charge Validation

This module focuses on the detailed review of financial information received from operators. Participants develop a systematic process for validating charges, reviewing classifications and testing expenditure against approved activities.

Expenditure Monitoring and Partner Reconciliation

This module develops practical capabilities for monitoring expenditure and reconciling operator information with internal accounting records. The focus is on identifying differences, understanding their causes and establishing effective resolution processes.

Information Rights, Financial Governance and Dispute Resolution

This module examines the governance processes that enable non-operators to exercise effective financial oversight. Participants learn how information rights, evidence requirements and structured dispute processes support financial control.

Financial Reporting, Performance Review and Integrated JV Oversight

This module brings the course concepts together by examining how non-operators integrate operator reporting, accounting treatment, expenditure analysis, reconciliation and governance into an effective financial oversight process.
